This book is a labor of love, one that spans 75 years of jazz journalism. It could never have come together so beautifully without the contributions of writers, photographers, editors, designers, sales professionals, circulation managers and the magazine's ownership. Every one of these people have looked at DownBeat as something more important than just a magazine, or just a job. And then there are the artists who have given their time, energy, thoughts and even writing talents to DownBeat over the years. And finally, none of it matters without the readers. They cheer us when we do it right and set us straight when we do it wrong. Given the fact that we're still around through 75 years and several generations of readers, we get a lot more cheers than canceled subscriptions.

Without all of these folks, DownBeat is nothing. This book is dedicated to all of them-the DownBeat family.
